Students at Cambridge International AS and A Level Psychology develop their appreciation of the subject by exploring the ways in which psychology is conducted. As part of their studies, students also review important research, which provides a better understanding of the ways in which psychology has been applied and a better understanding of the main approaches, research methods, issues and debates. The curriculum reflects four core areas of psychology: biology, cognitive, formative and social; it also links psychology with anomaly, consumer behaviour, health and organizations.
