Through a sample of Zuko customers, we saw that between 40 and 50% of users return to credit card fields at a once. That's a fairly significant number of people who don't enter their information correctly on the first attempt. For more advice on how to improve form conversion, see Zuko's Big Guide to Form Optimization and Analytics.Which payment cards are accepted? Ideally your website accepts all payment cards, but who has more unusual' cards can ask to be reassured about acceptance their card a for example, who has Amex or Discover cards may have lived real life. Often these symbols appear before entering the information itself, at the point where the customer initially chooses the type of payment they want to choose (for example if they offer the possibility to pay via Paypal, credit or Klarna):What information should I ask for?To process a credit card payment, the following information is required:Card numberCard holder nameExpiration dateSecurity codeBilling addressRemoving unnecessary fieldsWe have seen an improvement in this regard in recent years, but there are still forms that require additional and unnecessary information.Two examples:Card typeYou (the merchant) can determine the type of payment from the first digits entered, and thus it is possible For example:3 a Travel/entertainment cards (such as American Express and Diners Club) 4 a Visa5 a MasterCard6 a This may have been a requirement in the past, but it will no longer be needed to accept payment, so cut it.Each additional field in a module increases the cognitive load of a user, even if it does not. A's fill it out a in other words, the form requires a greater effort the more information required, even if it is not required. Cut wherever possible.We will not cover fields in this article, as they deserve a full-fledged blog. This leaves us with Card Holder Name, Card Number, Expiry Date and Security Code.How should I label my fields?It looks like it should be extremely simple, but there are a couple of pitfalls here. Card Holder Remember, you are looking for the name, as it appears on the card not the full name of the person or the name on the bank account. Label your field this way:It could actually create confusion. Is this asking for my full name? Apply Name codes on Card or Name (as it appears on the card) Text of the Guide You can also use the text of the Guide:The above is a very complicated way of asking for the same information.Security codeThose extra numbers you need to be able to make card payments. Different companies have different naming conventions:A Card verification value (CVV2, Visa) Card verification code (CVC, Mastercard) Card identification number (CID, Amex, 4 digits) Rather than choose one of these and potentially confused users who refer to it with a different name, its best to go wide (Ae) AASecurity CodeAA) and then help users.A picture like this is very useful:Remember that these site codes in different places for different types of paper and for AMEX users, this code is 4 digits long (weAeAA has seen security code fields which are then limited to three characters and the labels must be visible at all times, even after a user enters the information into the fields, and at no point should you rely only on icons, such as the following:What does a padlock symbol mean? My pin number? A password? Icons can be ambiguous and useless - side with clarity, and have labels always visible, and the most descriptive and clear what format should the data be provided? The message is also confused and profoundly useless. On the same site, if I insert a two-digit security code: this is ambiguous, since the actual error is that I only entered two figures instead of three. The site knows it and could take measures to be more useful. The errors of the number are often useless: in the case above, I inserted dashes (and too many of them in this). A more useful error message could be A e a ,~ A a a a a a a a e Please enter only the numbers and avoid special characters or dashes. This is some unnecessary messages: to be A e a ,~ A a «is not valid» is something that computers say, and it doesn't help users correct their mistake. Is the number too short, or too long? Therefore, it is therefore possible to ask for information on the cards, remember these key points: Request the minimum quantity of information that clearly requires fields and provide additional information (for the security code for example) accept more inputs and user formats, if possible.
