If you're drawing up a super busy program that makes it difficult to meet new people or simply you prefer to get all the first potentially embarrassing conversations out of the way in a format with much less pressure, you can find that starting the search for a real-life partner online contains a lot of charm. The online connection options are abundant and diverse. Some sites use elaborate technology to match your personality and preferences with other singles, while others have a more basic approach that requires a little more practical effort from users. If you're interested in giving online dating a test, many of the sites offer free trials, although some features can be quite limited without paid subscription. Let's take a look at what some of the main sites have to offer. Match.com is the oldest major dating site that is still in operation. Launched in April 1995, it is a source of long-term and short-term relations. According to searches conducted by datingadvice.com, the site has a total score of 4.9/5.0, with the highest brands in popularity, ease of use and features. Since its birth, Match.com has gained a respected international reputation and operates in 28 countries and 38 languages. Among the more than fifteen million active users, the gender ratio is close to 49% men to 51% women, and the site addresses both heterosexual and LGBTQ individuals. Photo Courtesy: Andrew Harrier/Bloomberg/Getty Images A full profile takes about thirty minutes to complete, although signing through a social media account can speed up the process. A paid subscription gives you access to seven daily games based on the potential compatibility of the profile. Also, you always have access to reciprocal matches to view mutually compatible profiles and reverse matches to view profiles of people looking for someone like you. You can also see your story of types, favorable enableds, and admixes and read your incoming messages. 160; as a nice extra extra extra extra bonus, you have a six-month free subscription if you have don't find a match within the first six months. The price varies according to the selected period of time, and the navigation of the site has a simple layout. eHarmony began the year 2000 and took the thriving online storm dating world with its use of psychological, scientific attraction approaches that considered ability, temperaments, goals and personality features in its coordinated algorithms. Two decades later, the site focuses on heterosexual men and women older than 18 who are interested in long-term relationships and contribute to about 2% of new marriages in the United States. The relationship between men and women on the site is 48% and 52%, and the overall assessment is 4.7/5.0, with the security that gains the highest individual level. Photo: Ted Ted Setup images for the site takes a bit more because of the complete evaluation of the personality that evaluates the dealbreakers and likes. You will only see the profiles considered compatible, and then you can filter them for city or age. If you are still nervous about first contact, even in an online environment, the site makes pre-written appetizers available to help you break the ice. eHarmony is available in more than 190-countries and is easy to navigate. It does not offer the free six-month extension offered by Match.com not to find a match, but it does offer a free three-month extension if you are not satisfied with your first three-month subscription. Monthly prices vary depending on the subscription period chosen. Now a popular platform of user-friendly online meetings, Zoosk started in 2007 as a Facebook application. The aim at the time was to provide young people with a platform for finding occasional and long-term relationships. To achieve this goal, the site provides individual in-depth tools for dating and communication. It has an overall rating of 4.7/5.0, with features, ease of use and value that earn the highest ratings. Like Harmony, it has a male/female relationship between 48% and 52%, but these numbers come from a much wider user base than 40 million users in more than eighty countries. Photo Courtesy: @Zoosk/Twitter The platform uses behavioral matching to connect potential partners and targets both heterosexual single and LGBTQ single. It is possible to filter the research according to the nationality, place and religion, as well as physical characteristics such as body type and height. Zoosk's integrated SmartPick function also provides suggestions based on user behaviour on the site. The site allows you to see users online and write self-response messages for simplicity. You can send 1 like it or smile for free, but you need a subscription to read or send messages. Prices of subscription vary depending on the duration of subscription. With an overall assessment of 4.4/5.0, ChristianMingle.com is well known as a trusted site for Christian single to find long-term meetings and relationships. The site was opened for the first time in the 1997 as a Christian alternative to some of the meeting sites that were popular at the time. It has been estimated that the site is responsible for approximately 29% of all Christian marriages between couples who have met online. The user base is composed of over 16 million Christians around the world of different confessions and beliefs. Photo Courtesy: @christianmingle/Twitter The site is for single people of any sexual orientation, but it is not open to those who identify themselves as non-religious. Select various preferences when creating your profile, including details of your religion and relationship that looking, as well as the details you want in a partner to make sure that the site matches you with compatible profiles. The free subscription includes a limited set of features. The Premium subscription has different price points, depending on the period. The premier of the site app launches in 2016. Can you tell me the date of 78 days from now? How many days till Christmas? How many days has it been since your last birthday? All these questions have their answers hidden inside Windows! Curious? Continue reading to see how you can answer these questions in an instant using Windows built-in utility called Calculator. No, no. This is not a guide to show how to perform basic calculations on the calculator. This is an application of a unique feature in the Windows Calculator application, and the function is called Date Calculation. Most of us don't really use the Windows Calculator much and, when we do, it's just for a moment (make small calculations). However, it is full of some really interesting features, so let's go ahead and see how the Date Calculation works. To begin, open Calculator by pressing the winkey, and enter the calculation... (it should be jumping up by now, if not, you can type the rest of the...stuner as well as just to be sure). April. And anyway, this date calculation function works both in Windows 7 and 8. Once opened, click View and select Date Calculation (or press Ctrl+E). Now this is where the fun begins. The idea is quite simple. You can do two types of calculations here: Calculating the difference between two dates Add or subtract a number (days) to a date Since we are messing with dates, it is easy to work with the past, the present, or even the future. Let's just say you want to discover your current age in terms of days, months and years. Click the Calendar button in the To-Select Date of Birth field. Initially, the current date will be shown. Navigating through the calendar is easy. Click on the title (Month), and it enlarges to show every month of the year and the title is changed from month to year (in this case, from November to 2012). Click it again to see a list of years in the current decade, and the title changes to the decade it shows (alternatively, click the left and right buttons to pass between years). Click the title again to show several decades. You can use the left and right buttons to navigate within months, years, decades or a list of decades. Finally, to jump to the current date, click on Today. Now that you've learned to navigate through the calendar, you can easily select your birth date (suppose it's February 29- Geeky, isn't it?). Since we're going to find out how old you are today, so in the To field we'll use today by clicking on the button "Today.226;" (Yes, the date indicated in the Today field is the date on which this post was written!) Finally, click the Calculation to get the desired result. The resulting difference will be presented in terms of years, months and days, and simply in days as well. Adding or subtracting a number to a specific date to is a bit boring in real life. For example, see this script somewhere: 4 days left! 4 and ask yourself 4 What is the exact date after the 43 days have passed 4 what? I'd probably face in this way - Let's see, if today is November 16, and this is a month of thirty days, then after forty days will be December 26, and adding 3 to it does on December 29th. What day will it be? Well, maybe we should try a different approach. Turn on the calculator, click the drop and select "Add or subtract days to a specified date..." Now, then 4 is just a date field where we have to specify the date to (or from) from which you want to add (or subtract) a certain number. Once the date is fixed, select whether we want to add or subtract something. Select Add and type the number of days (or months/years) to add to the specified date and press the Calcium button. So it will be Saturday the twenty-ninth December, 2012. You can also specify how many days, months or even years must be added or removed from the established date. 194; 160; once arrived at you226; 128;ve; have entered the information, click Calculation and you226;which will be presented with the day and the resulting date. Let's see what date was, 5 years, 8 months, and 80 days ago today. It is here '226; 128; it is a fun fact. If you do not turn on the computer by clicking on its 4r4€TM; 4€TM; (in case you want to convert days to weeks, or do any other calculation). What interesting date calculations can be found? Let us know in the comments! Here226; vet one for you: Windows 8 was released how many days after the release of Windows 1.0? The first to calculate receive a five virtual! Batti-five!
