Perched on the hill Montmartre The Sacré-Cœur is an emblematic monument of Paris. With its white stones and neo-bielanthing architecture, it contributes to the charm of Montmartre. But what is the history of the sacré "Come on" Ur basilica? " Did you know that it was built in reaction to more than a war of war and violence in the frança? Let's take a look at the little-known story of this monument. The Sacré-Cœur "Ur BasaLica: A church to save the France We are in 1870. in a few weeks, the History of France will have a new turn. On July 19, the France declared war in the Prussia, but in September, 2 Napolei III was forced to establish the arms at the end of the Battle of Sedan and on 4 September the third republic was proclaimed: This was the end of the second impact. However , the war with the prestration still has not ended and Paris was surrounded for more than four months. The cold and hunger make this particularly difficult siege for the Parisians forced to feed on horses, cats, dogs, rats and to the garden garden animals (camel, elephant, antlope) that are forced to sacrifice! in December of 1870, Victor Hugo Witness: à € " à € " no most. Paris Stieged, by Jean-Louis-Ernest Meissonier On January 18, 1871 The German imposition was proclaimed in the Mirror Salar of Versailles Palace and in January, 26 a ceasefire was signed. However, some Parisians refused to return. In March, 18 Adolphe Thiers sent the Exchange to take advantage of the 227 cannons installed on the Montmartre hill. The operation was poorly prepared and failed: the officers were unarmed by the crowd. It was then the beginning of the Paris commune, an insurrection with a duration of more than two months that placed the burning capital and spill of blood. The Prefecture of Paris burned during the commune, photography by Alphonse LiÀ É Bert. This complicated period that began in 1789 with the revolution, was seen by some catholic as a divine punishment, so much so that two Parisians in Exaplio, Hubert Rohault de Fleury and Alexandre Legentil, promised to build a new Church If God saved the France. The Construction of Sacré-Cœur "his basics since the situation calms down, was decided to raise the said church on Mount Montmartre, a symbolic place at the beginning of the Paris Commune and where Saint Denis was beheaded. The project was debated, some people saw as the symbol of the Church during the revolution, but in 1873 a law recognized the Church as the public utility and a vast national signature was launched to finance its Construction. The French were called to participate in the extension of their media, a program that met with great success graces to the "stone signature" that encouraged the population to raise funds for the purchase of a stone, a column or even chapel in which the initials or the names of the donors were recorded. The work was concluded, but the planned consecration for October 1914 was postponed because of war and no would happen until 1919. The Sacré-Cœur "Ur in construction in 1882am, in 1887, in 1887.
